Another Seccier.

We shave already chronicled the withdrawal of one Baltimore clergyman from the Old School Presbyterian Assembly, on account of its political tendencies. The Gazette, of that city, chronicles another:

A meeting of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, at Franklin Square, took place last night, at the request of the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Lefevre. The congregation was large, and Dr. Lefevre spoke of the action of the General Assembly of the Church from 1845 up to the late session. In 1845, he said, the Assembly passed resolutions declaring that those who taught abolitionism taught a doctrine opposed to the Bible, and those who taught abolitionism taught a doctrine opposed to the Bible, and up to 1861 that sentiment prevailed. At the last named date, the body took up political subjects. A protest was then made by about one-fourth of the Assembly, and among the signers of that protest were Rev. Drs. John C. Backus and Cyrus Dickson, of this city. He read the protest to the congregation. In 1862 and 1863, that action was affirmed, and slavery was made a test of membership. But was made a test of membership. But the crowning act was that of the late session, which requires every pastor to examine persons from the seceded States applying for membership. States applying for membership, and if such shall not declare their love for the Government of the United States, they must be excluded from the communion of the Church. That action was unconstitutional, and opposed to the spirit of the Old School Presbyterian Church, and he would rather obey God than man. For ten years he had endeavored to teach his people the doctrine of the Bible, and now he could teach no other. He had been tempted to leave them by the now he could teach no other. He had been tempted to leave them by the offer of a pleasant and profitable charge, but if they accorded with him, he would love to remain with them. He should, however, shortly dissolve his connection with the Gendissolve his connection with the General Assembly, and hoped on Wednesday night next to hear the decision of the congregation. There seemed to be but one feeling among those to be but one feeling among those a call.

COTTON IN TURKEY.—The cotton crop throughout Turkey will be much larger this year than any grown becrop throughout Turkey will be much larger this year than any grown before, but the heavy fall in prices will have a serious effect. At present the price of cotton has fallen to eight plastres per oke, the rate some times ranging as high as twenty-three plastres. Various circumstances combine to produce this unfavorable state of things, the monetary crisis and the fall caused by increased imports from America being the principal causes. principal causes.
